I feel somewhat intimidated by one of the teaching assistants. He makes me feel I am unable to achieve anything and that I don't belong into this class. The guys around me all seem to understand what the professor is talking about, but I am completely lost.

Whenever I visit my parents, they complain that I study something "useless" and am not making any money yet. I'm starting to feel really discouraged.

I thought I had a good grip this one lecture, but during the exam I just blacked out and couldn't even understand the problems. I used to be nervous for big exams before too, but it seems to be getting worse.

I got diagnosed with macular degeneration last week and might lose my eyesight at some point. Is it even possible to do math when you're blind? Should I switch careers before it's too late? Who do I talk to? I feel so lost.

Do I need to go abroad at some point? I really don't want to, but I feel like it is almost mandatory to get a job later.

Role: Student

I would love to go abroad for a semester or two, but I'm a bit scared.

Since my partner has broken up with me three months ago, I cannot focus on math anymore. I feel so sad and hurt. Most of the time I just sit around and sulk.

Role: Student

I spend so much time waitressing and tutoring high school students that I don't find time to study. Maybe I should quit studying altogether.

I wasn't able to focus the whole week. My grandma broke her hip on Saturday and is now in hospital and I talk to her on the phone all the time. Even when I am not on the phone, I find it very difficult to focus on math.
